We occasionally get the question, “Are scholarships/discounts available for Immanuel Approach training and/or materials?” Here is our response for people in first-world countries, and also for ministers/ministries that raise support in first world countries:

It would be wonderful if there were a university, a larger ministry, or a charitable organization behind Charlotte and I that could provide the funds and the discernment process for awarding scholarships. Unfortunately, this is not the case. So if you really, really, really want Immanuel Approach training/materials but don't have the funds, I would encourage you to pursue a “Do It Yourself” scholarship.

For example, check with your church, or the healing ministry you are volunteering with regarding the possibility that they might help. If your church or ministry are not able to help, then explain your Immanuel Approach work to your family, friends, and wider faith community. Just like you would do if you were raising money for a mission trip – tell them about the exciting things the Lord is doing through the Immanuel Approach and invite them to be a part of your vision to use these principles and tools to help people experience the living, tangible, interactive, personal, friendship presence of Jesus. I also encourage you to talk to the Lord about this need. Again, just as you would do if you were raising money for a mission trip – ask the Lord for help with raising the needed funds. Finally, if you are providing inexpensive or free ministry to family, friends, fellow-parishioners, or clients, it would be reasonable to ask them to help you with the cost of training.

And remember that there is a huge amount of free-download material on our website.
